Local Doctor leads pro life movement "It's something God has put into my heart"

by Mary Lou Bytof

Although the ultimate duty of a physician is to save lives, a young doctor from the Dillsburg area is taking his responsibility one step further.

He's struggling to save unborn children-not via modern medicine-but by stopping abortion.

As the leader of Operation One Percent, a pro-life movement, Dr. Chris Kahlenborn, 28, has become a controversial news figure in Harrisburg. Several weeks ago, the doctor spent 10 days in the Dauphin County Prison in lieu of $15,000 bail for leading a group of 30 protesters into the city's Hillcrest Woman's Medical Center, an abortion clinic on North Front Street.

On Saturday morning, March 18, the day of the arrest, Kahlenborn said he distracted a guard in the rear of the clinic, while members of his group entered the facility through the front door. Some members posed as patients, allowing others to file past them into the building, Kahlenborn said.

Planning Commission Chairman not reinstated in Monaghan

by Deborah Recker

A motion to reappoint Mrs. Mary Cobol as Planning Commission Chairman for a new term of five (5) years was not supported by a majority vote at the April 3, 1989 meeting of the Monaghan Township Board of Supervisors. Mrs. Cobol was selected for the chair position on January 18, 1989 when the Planning Commission reorganized. She replaced Mr. Larry Rhone who was appointed as vice-chairman at that time. Mrs. Cobol's reaction to the 2 to 1 descending vote was that of surprise stating "I did not ask to be dismissed and intended to accept the position if appointed. I have always conducted myself with integrity." Mrs. Cobol also stated that she took the position seriously and had attended various seminars to aid in her decision making.

In other action, the board authorized Secretary Laverne Rohrbach to advertise for the position of Planning Commission Secretary. The Planning Commission has been without a secretary for a long period of time and the increased amount of paperwork that is required has necessitated the hiring. The position was offered to Planning Commission members but not accepted by anyone.

Secretary Rohrbach was also authorized and has taken action to advertise a public hearing to discuss and receive comments on an ordinance amending the Township's Zoning Ordinance #30. This ordinance amends Article III, section 303c of the Monaghan Township Zoning Ordinance #30 to permit as a special exception, a golf course within the Rural Open Space Zone.

This ordinance is expected to be enacted at the May 1, 1989 meeting of the Board of Supervisors. The public is invited to attend. Written comments may be submitted to the Township Secretary on or before April 28, 1989 for consideration at the hearing.

The proposed amendment to this zoning ordinance is resultant of the Zoning Hearing Boards 3 to 2 approval vote for the acceptance of the Chilton Golf Course plans and the Board of Supervisors' vote to accept their recommendation. Prior to the vote, Supervisor Lloyd Persun questioned Planning Commission Chairman Mrs. Mary Cobol as to the basis for the two (2)

While inside the clinic, six protesters had latched themselves together with bicycle locks. They did that to make it difficult for the police to remove them, the leader said. By their presence, the group managed to "scare away" several prospective patrons, he added.

"The police were totally surprised by the sit-in," Kahlenborn said.

He was charged with conspiracy, defiant trespassing, harassment, and resisting arrest. Although the doctor said he had anticipated his arrest and subsequent incarceration, the steep bail was totally unexpected.

The doctor said he has no idea how District Magistrate James Pianska arrived at the amount -- $15,000 in cash to be paid in full, but he said he thinks that the mayor and police captain of Harrisburg may have influenced the judge's decision.

Kahlenborn previously had led pickets at the clinic and at Harrisburg Hospital, which has an abortion-on-demand policy. In February, the doctor was arrested for using a bullhorn to chant pro-life messages during a picket in front of Harrisburg Hospital. On March 2, it was ruled that his use of the bullhorn was within the law and did not disrupt hospital operations.

Indeed, the young doctor has chosen to lead a far different life this year than most of his fellow graduates at The Pennsylvania State University College of Medicine in Hershey. After his graduation in May 1988, Dr. Kahlenborn decided to take off a year from practicing medicine and dedicate it to the pro-life movement. He said he has been picketing for the movement for approximately seven years.

"It's something God has put into my heart," he said of his cause.

In August 1988, Kahlenborn said he started Operation One Percent "because I was sick and tired of having only two people picketing."

The name of the organization is based on its leader's conviction that one percent of each church's population should be able and willing to actively picket. So far, the organization has recruited at least one percent of the membership of each church it has visited, Kahlenborn said.

"Large-scale pickets are powerful," Kahlenborn said. "With them, we at least could start to put pressure on the hospitals," he explained. Statistically, approximately one-third of all abortions in the United States are performed in hospitals, the doctor said.

Through peaceful demonstrations, letter writing campaigns, and media coverage, Operation One Percent has been striving to get public support to help encourage the Board of Directors of Harrisburg Hospital to change its abortion-on-demand policy.

Since the hospital is "actively ignoring" the organization's pressure, Kahlenborn said, the group is asking for the support of the top religious leaders in Central Pennsylvania. So far, none of the religious leaders contacted by Operation One Percent have offered a definite commitment to join in a boycott of the hospital.

"We're not asking for a general boycott of the hospital," Kahlenborn explained. "It is a specific boycott; a total boycott of the obstetrics unit," he said. We want to encourage women whose doctors also practice in hospitals other than Harrisburg to have their babies in the other hospitals, Kahlenborn said.

The support of religious leaders is so essential to his cause, that Kahlenborn spent all 10 days of his incarceration fasting. "I wanted to create a momentum for the clergy to join us," Kahlenborn said of his fast.

He rejected all solid food. Fruit juice was his main staple. Knowing the health risks involved in long-term fasting, the doctor said he had studied the subject and was prepared to enter into a fast that weekend.

"I wanted to have the opportunity to fast in jail," he said.

The doctor said his prison experience was not frightening. Yet, he did find the initial line-up somewhat intimidating when he entered the facility. "I just didn't know what to expect," he said.

For the first four days, Kahlenborn said he was confined in a closet-size cell and was not allowed visitors or reading material. "One guard managed to sneak me a Bible," he said.

Windows in the cell allowed him to see and to speak with other inmates. Through an outside window, he fed the birds the food that he refused to eat.

On the fifth day, the doctor was moved from the tiny cell to a large room with 16 other inmates. That room was known to the prisoners as "the jungle", Kahlenborn said.

Once in "the jungle", the doctor said he had trouble falling asleep.

"The prisoners talked until one a.m., then the guards got really noisy until 3 a.m.," he recalled. When some prisoners asked the guards to lower their voices, the guards retorted, "What are you guys, angels?" the doctor said.

Kahlenborn said he was surprised to learn that most of his fellow inmates had a lot of respect for the pro-life movement. After a while, he said, the prisoners started to look to him for guidance. While some begged for bail money, others enlisted his help in writing letters to the district attorney. Some had asked for medical advice.

In almost all cases, the inmates had been convicted of either buying, selling, or using drugs, Kahlenborn said.

To pass the time, the doctor said he played chess. "Some of the prisoners were really good players," he said.

On Easter weekend, Kahlenborn said he and the other prisoners were locked in cells for 60 hours because there were not enough guards on duty. They couldn't attend Easter services, or even take a shower, he said.

After 10-1/2 days, Kahlenborn's father paid a bail bondsman a $750 service fee, and the doctor was released. A restraining order forbids him to go near the Hillcrest clinic before his April 27 court appearance.

In the interim, the doctor is trying to enlist the support of

Casey Addresses Referendum

The following is a reprint from Governor Robert P. Casey's weekly radio message on Saturday, March 18, 1989.

On Tuesday, March 16, Pennsylvania voters will have the chance to cast an important vote for fairness. On the ballot will be a simple referendum question. It asks whether we should amend our state constitution to allow the local property tax rates paid by families and homeowners to be lower than the rates paid by business and corporations with the difference made up by revenue sources more fairly based on a person's ability to pay.

That's the question. And if you agree that Pennsylvania's average homeowners, wage-earners, and retirees on fixed incomes deserve a break on their taxes; that it's time to close the loopholes used by big business and the very rich, then there's one simple answer. Vote yes. Now, there are already special interests out there trying to tell you something different, using what the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette has called "scare tactics" by claiming that tax reform really means tax increase. The fact is that the vast majority of average Pennsylvania taxpayers will get a break if the referendum passes. Not a big break, but a real one.

Anyone with an income of less than $45,000 stands to benefit. That's nearly three out of four people in our state.

The great majority of working families and retirees will get a break because passage of the referendum will allow at least a 25 percent cut in property taxes in most places; the first cut in decades in the Philadelphia and Pittsburgh wage and commuter taxes; and an end to unfair nuisance taxes.

Will somebody have to pay more taxes? Probably so. A yes vote will help close loopholes so that big corporations and the wealthiest individuals will have to pay their fair share. But don't you think it's about time they did?

Look, nobody likes taxes. That's why I've made sure that we haven't raised state taxes a single penny since I've been Governor. But if you've been hearing a lot of conflicting claims about tax reform and you're not sure what to think, listen to this:

Plenty of respected, well-known groups have studied this issue in detail and they're all urging you to vote yes on May 16. Because they represent the concerns of average working people, older citizens, farmers, consumers and small business—exactly the people who'll be helped most by a yes vote.

The American Association of Retired Persons, or A.A.R.P.—which represents more than 1.7 million Pennsylvanians—says that voting yes is crucial lifting the unfair burden of property taxes off the backs of our older citizens.

The non-partisan League of Women Voters says vote yes so we can have more fairness and give the people themselves more voice over their taxes.

The Pennsylvania Council of Churches says vote yes because tax reform will help our working families and our older citizens.

The Pennsylvania Farmers Association, the Farmers Union, and the State Grange—all say vote yes, because tax reform will make it possible for more of our family farmers to stay in business.

Many small business owners like grocers say vote yes, because tax reform will permanently freeze taxes that make it tough for small business to thrive in our communities.

The tax reform plan is the product of years of study and hard work. It had broad bipartisan support in both houses of the General Assembly. More than 80 percent voted for it. And as most of us know, it's pretty unusual for Republicans and Democrats to get together on just about anything. But that's exactly what they did in casting their yes votes.

So if the A.A.R.P. and the League of Women Voters, farmers and workers, churches and small business people, Democrats and Republicans are all saying that a vote yes will give just a little more fairness and a little less taxes for most of us, who could possibly be against it?

Well, it's no surprise that the only folks that don't want you to vote yes are the big business interests who're using scare tactics and misinformation, hoping we'll believe that any change from where we are today is dangerous.

Nothing could be further from the truth. The reality is that our present tax system is unfair and we have to change it. We have to change it by giving our older citizens a break and helping them to keep the homes they've worked for all their lives.

We have to change it by cutting the high wage and commuter taxes paid by the people who live or work in our two biggest cities. We have to change it by getting rid of the loopholes which only the wealthiest can take advantage of.

And the only way to vote for change is to vote yes on May 16. Vote yes on one very simple question: Should we amend our state constitution to allow the local property tax rates paid by families and homeowners to be lower than the rates paid by business and corporations with the difference made up by revenue sources more fairly based on a person's ability to pay?

Taxpayers concerned about education

New group forms in school district

by Mary Lou Bercheni

A new organization has been formed in the Northern School District. Its name is P.A.C. (Parent Advisory Committee), and it will be operating through the high school.

"PAC will not be a fund-raising organization," said Committee Coordinator Elaine Keefer. "PAC wants to work with teachers, administration, and students in the pursuit of educational excellence at the high school."

PAC started this past February with eleven parents organizing the committee. They met with High School Principal Richard Dietrich and informed the administration that they are serious about being involved in the school system. Interest in PAC has resulted in the membership growing to over 70 at present.

PAC does not intend to grind any individual axes. They are concerned parents and taxpayers who want to help faculty, administration, and students in a positive way. Keefer stated that the main contribution of PAC is to consolidate the interests of all parents into one group.

According to Keefer, some of the parents' concerns involve class size, additional space, hiring of more teachers, curriculum enrichment and social behavior. "Hopefully, PAC will help achieve goals that will allow staff and parents to support the development of the students in a caring, democratic school environment," said Keefer.

Dietrich will be acting liaison between PAC and the faculty. Teachers will also be represented by Edwin Graham and Joe and Emily Meika.

Graham, representative of the taxpayers, though not always well-informed, should meet with teachers and find out what is happening. "Get involved," said Graham. "School should be a teacher-parent relationship. I think PAC is an extremely good idea," he added.

Student Council President Michelle Mayhew feels the same way. Although she has not met the student affairs liaison between PAC and council, she would enjoy having parent involvement at the council level. "Hopefully, PAC would be receptive to new ideas and help support student activities," said Mayhew.

Dietrich is apprehensive of such a schoolwide organization. "In the past, there never seemed enough interest to start such a parenting group, but now parents coming up through the middle school with their children want to continue to have a caring organization at the high school," said Dietrich.

Dietrich sees PAC being active in the school yet not spring, but definitely in the 1989-90 school year. "Every new organization has its growing pains and problems," said Dietrich. "But with a healthy attitude, such as the main contribution of PAC is to consolidate the interests of all parents into one group."

According to Co-Coordinator Denise Yohn, "Parents are glad to find a support group at the high school level. Parents having difficulty interacting with school staff now have a group to go to for help."

The school does not want to take over the role of the parent; neither does the parent belong in the classroom. The climate of both working together promotes positive behavior and encourages learning.

Keefer says, "Schools are as good as the people who staff them and the people who send their children to them. Therefore, in the delicate combination, parent concerns should be listened to and responded to positively."

Book, Plant Sale

A new selection of quality used books will be on sale at the Dillsburg Area Public Library on April 28 and 29. A variety of healthy plants will also be for sale on those days.

Journalism Scholarship

Northern High School will hold a journalism contest for junior year students to compete for the Pilot Pen Journalism Scholarship.

The four-year scholarship covers all tuition, books, room and board at the university of the winner's choice. It is sponsored by the Pilot Pen Corporation of America, a leading supplier of writing instruments based in Trumbull, Conn.

In the local contest, the competing students will receive background materials, listen to an audio tape of a mock press conference, and then have an hour to write a 500-word newspaper story covering the event. The school will select a local winner whose entry will be submitted to the contest administrators. They will judge all entries and select a winner from each of the 50 states.

Each state winner, along with a chaperone, will be flown to Washington, D.C. for a day-long news reporting competition at the National Press Club on October 31. The contest will be built around a simulated fast-breaking international news situation with a series of press briefings and news bulletins. The students will write their news stories under deadline pressure.

A panel of distinguished print and broadcast journalists will judge the news stories and select the grand winner of the full scholarship. The four runners-up will receive $2,500 cash prizes.

PHEAA Processing Grants

Rep. Bruce Smith said today that the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency (PHEAA) is beginning to process the first of an expected 300,000 state grant and federal aid applications for the 1989-90 school year.

In addition to access to state aid, the PHEAA application also serves as an application for and access to funds under Federal Pell Grants and campus-based financial aid at most Pennsylvania schools and colleges. State grants can amount to as much as $2,000 and the Pell grant as much as $2,200 for the neediest students for the current academic year. Both of these figures are expected to increase for the academic year beginning in September.

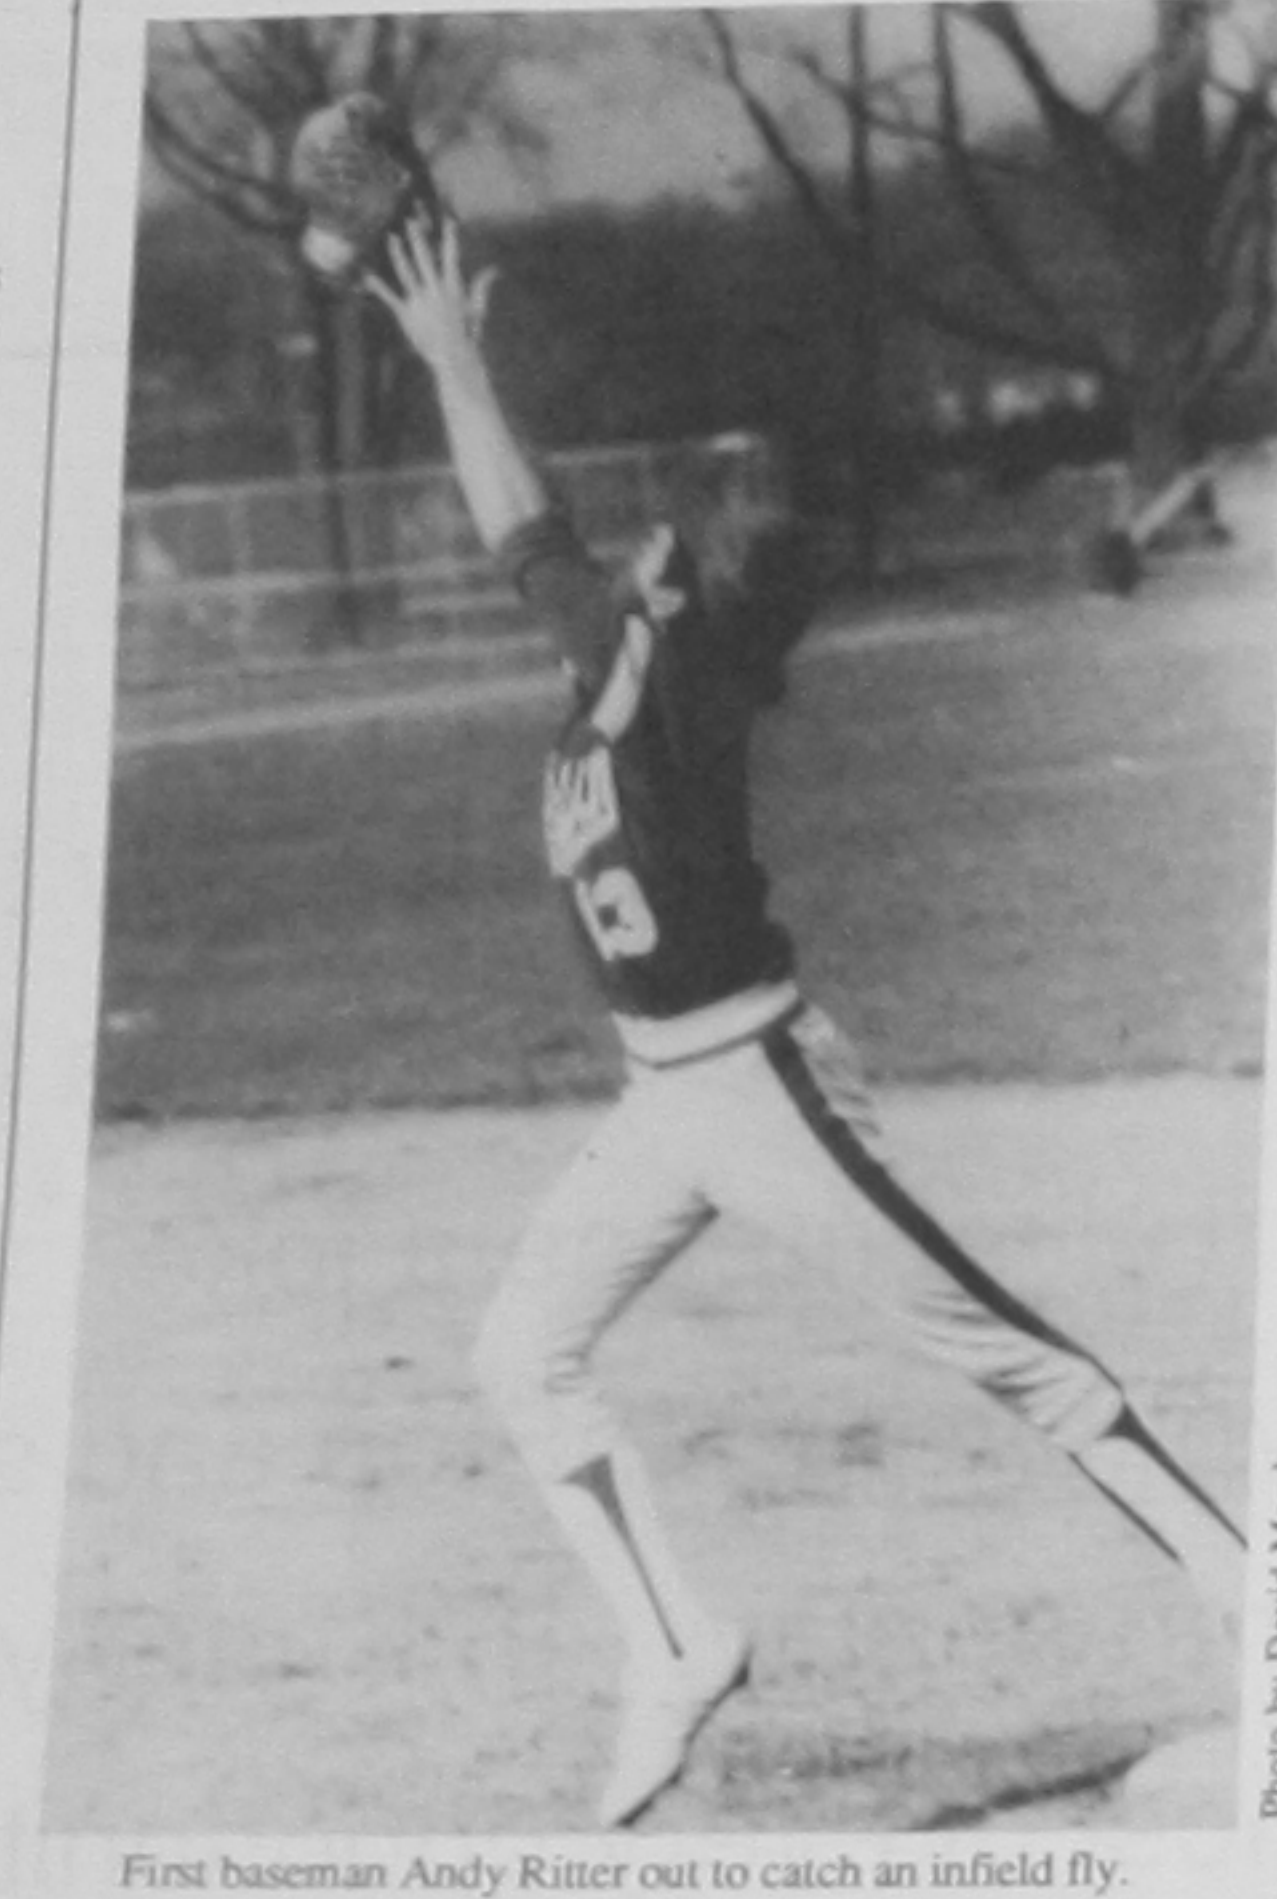

PHEAA is urging students to apply well before the May 1 deadline because many schools have earlier deadlines and award their financial aid on a first-c

Bear Baseball Drops Two

by John Middlekauff

Northern Baseball fortunes fell on unproductive ground this past week. First off, the Polar Bears traveled to West Perry on Tuesday (4/04), where they battled the always tough Mustangs. In a real heartbreaker, the Bears dropped a 1-0 decision. The only run of the game came in the fourth inning, and was unearned. It is no wonder neither team was able to put many runs on the scoreboard, as there were only three base hits in the entire contest-two by Northern. Scott Appling, while tossing a gritty one-hitter, was the victim of his teammates' lack of support. He and Andy Ritter were the only Bears to get base hits.

The second contest, played on Thursday (4/06), was a different ball game all together. In weather fit only for Bears (the real kind), Northern played host to Bulldogs of Big Spring High. The Polar Bears punched out eight base hits, and scored seven runs but were handled by Big Spring 14-7. The Bulldogs got to start and lower Brian Newman early. In the second inning, Big Spring loaded the bases on two walks and a single. With one out that brought to the plate Bulldog third-sacker Dan Wonders. Mr. Wonders lofted a high fly to right field, that the wind seemed to take and carried over the little league fence in sight for a grand slam homerun. Northern was able to battle back in this contest, but just were not able to keep the Bulldogs from scoring. Trailing by only one run at the end of five innings, the Bears saw their chances go up in smoke, as Big Spring scored six runs in their half of the six inning. Leading the way offensively, for Northern was senior George Merovich who went 2-4 with two RBIs.

First baseman Andy Ritter out to catch an infield fly.

Northern Track Routs Camp Hill

by John Middlekauff

Holding their third track meet in one week, both the Polar Bears boys and girls "did their thing", as they completely dominated the Lions of Camp Hill. The boys did in their opponents from Camp Hill 116-34, while the girls handled the Lady Lions 108-33.

With such domination by both squads, it is very difficult to pick out just one person or persons who played such a major role. Against the Lions, Matt Lerew was a double winner (1600 meter run and 300 M Int. Hurdles), he was ably assisted by Dave Gruber (discus & javelin) and Nick Psolka (triple jump & long jump) as double winners also. Just as strong were the boys relay teams as they dominated their opponents.

On the ladies side, Nancy Jacoby certainly made her presence felt once more. Miss Jacoby tied a school record for the 100 meter dash, and also won the 200 meter as well as doing her part in the 400 meter & 1600 meter relays. Joining Nancy as double winners were Autumn McFate (shot & discus) and Amy Minnich (400 meter run & 300 meter int. hurdles).

Lady Bears defeat Lady Lions 108-33.

BRATIC & PORTKO
Selling Your Business

I want to sell my business, but I want to protect the information which I supply to potential buyers in the event the business is not sold. How do I protect myself and my business?

When selling a business, it is often important to have a CONFIDENTIALITY AGREEMENT signed between the owner of the business and any potential buyers of the business. A confidentiality agreement provides for the safety of any and all information supplied to the person(s) who are interested in acquiring the business so that those persons do not use the information supplied against the owner of the business and so that they do not reveal that confidential information to other persons, such as a rival business.

A confidentiality agreement should contain the following information:

- It should define the proprietary uses and the information supplied (i.e., the income and expense, profit and loss and other statements concerning the company).
- The agreement should provide that the information be made available only to persons who are essential to the evaluation and completion of the transaction.
- If the prospective buyer does not wish to pursue the transaction, the confidentiality agreement provides that the buyer returns all copies of the information supplied.
- The agreement provides that the prospective buyer, its employees or representatives, will not disclose the information that the business, or any portion of the business, is for sale.
- The agreement should contain a statement which binds the employees and representatives of the prospective buyer who participate in the evaluation and completion of the transaction, with a statement warning the prospective buyer that any breach of the confidences of the business could cause irreparable and irreparable harm to the business and/or the owner(s), for which it (the buyer) would be help responsible.
- It should provide that all persons involved in the transaction, including all representations of the prospective purchaser, sign the confidentiality agreement and the original of the agreement should be given to the seller of the business.

A Confidentiality Agreement, properly prepared, will protect your business and you.
